

My journey as an educator in National Junior College started as a Physical Education and Mathematics teacher in 2011.

It has been a very fulfilling journey and enriching journey and I am thankful to be serving in this school, along side many like minded educators and wonderful students.

Personally for me, what drives me in what I do as an educator is the students, be it in teaching or in administrative duties. Ultimately in all the stakeholders that we work with, the child must be at the receiving end of what we do as an educator. Hence, I envision a college where everyone is able to uphold an effective and sustainable support structure that involves different stakeholders- parents, staff or student leaders to bring out the best in our students both academically and non academically.

I believe that every single child is unique in his or her own way. I would also hope to nurture an environment where students, parents and teachers are confident to work with one another and share experiences openly for a more holistic development for the child. As we move towards establishing various pathfinders for the students, I hope that my end goal for my students is to be a young adult who is self regulated and ready for the future.
